

ANSWER SHEET

Tricky Spellings List Nine Proofreading Answers

His last conscious thought was of his son and whether or not he'd ever see him again...

Upon entering the opulent building that housed the Galidean government, he had paused momentarily, not wanting to invite suspicion, to size up his escape route: it involved a balcony jump from quite a height, which made his heartbeat prematurely quicken as he had suffered from several occurrences of vertigo and wasn't looking forward to teetering on the ledge... he would find the courage to jump, he could not afford to disappoint his paymasters.

How had he got himself into this position? One erroneous decision had put him in a perilous situation and there was no medicine that would magically make things better. What he had to do was to acquire the documentation that would supposedly corroborate Cranston Inc.'s falsehoods.

He was now in the main chamber and the comforting image of his little boy's smile flickered across his mind when out of the corner of his eye he saw a guard approach before an unexpected blow from behind knocked him unconscious.